Question	The statement below was made by President Barack Obama on August 18, 2011.  What the United States will support is an effort to bring about a Syria that is democratic, just, and inclusive for all Syrians... We will support this outcome by pressuring President Assad to get out of the way of this transition, and standing up for the universal rights of the Syrian people along with others in the international community.  Source: Office of the White House Press Secretary What is the relationship between President Obama’s statement and U.S. involvement in Syrian political affairs?		Read and analyze the statement. Using evidence from President Obama’s statement, choose the response that best describes the reason for U.S. involvement in Syria’s political conflict.
A	development of diplomatic alliances	Incorrect – The text does not support this response. Alliances are friendly unions between nations, and there is no evidence in President Obama’s statement that he wanted to form an alliance with Syria. Instead, Obama said that he would “[pressure] President Assad to get out of the way.” Pressuring a nation’s leader to “get out of the way” is not a friendly action toward that nation’s leader.
B	support for the rule of law	Correct – Rule of law means that everybody must follow the law, including government officials. President Obama stated that “the United States will support” action which supports a Syrian government that is “democratic, just, and inclusive for all Syrians.” President Obama also stated that he was willing to “[pressure] President Assad to get out of the way” as Syria transitioned to a new form of government, meaning that the U.S. would pressure Syria’s president to obey rule of law. Finally, President Obama stated that the U.S. will “[stand] up for the universal rights of the...international community,” which means that the U.S. will get involved in conflicts that threaten the rule of law and individual rights of people anywhere in the world.
C	economic development	Incorrect – The statement does not support this response because economic development involves producing, buying, and/or selling goods and services; President Obama’s statement does not address Syria’s economy.
D	conflict resolution	Incorrect – The statement does not support this response because President Obama did not mention peace or any opportunities for diplomacy between Syrian President Assad and the United States. Instead, President Obama stated that President Assad had to “get out of the way” or face pressure from the United States.
